CONCERNING THE CURRENT LIST

Of the problems which arose in planning the Current List of Medical literature, that of the arrangement of the material presented the greatest difficulties. This resulted from the fact that almost no one is interested in the entire field of medicine, and furthermore the mass of medical literature is so vast that some classification of it is necessary in order that the reader may easily find the papers of interest to him without having to search through the countless numbers with which he is not concerned. The solution of this problem is complicated by the fact that the original literature itself is published in a disorganized manner. Practically all journals are made up of papers upon widely differing subjects. There are very few of a highly specialized character. Even a classification of them into the two fairly distinct groups of clinical and laboratory experimental research cannot be satisfactorily made. In practically all cases the clinical journals contain papers of a laboratory experimental character, and vice versa. A separation of the individual papers is rendered imperfect by the far too many which properly belong in both categories. Consequently the project of segregating these two principal branches of medical research in alternate numbers of the Current List was finally reluctantly abandoned.

In regard to the question of scope of the Current List, practically all of our Friends who have written to us, seem to be more concerned with obtaining a complete list of everything published than having any kind of selective classification made for them. It is evident that the majority would rather do their own searching than depend upon even the most competent organization to choose the papers pertaining to their particular field of research.

The present plan of recording in the Current List everything of medical interest that is found in the more than 3000 periodicals received by the Army Medical Library, with no other than the imperfect classification of the journals themselves, calls for exceeding diligence to discover the widely scattered papers upon particular subjects. Suggestions for improvement of this deficiency will be gratefully received. It is evident that if the Current List cannot be perfected sufficiently to satisfy the needs of the number of subscribers necessary to pay its cost, there will be no purpose in continuing its publication.

In this connection the items of cost of each 28-page issue (including covers) of 1000 copies of the Current List are: planographic printing $55.00, typing $15, envelopes, postage, mailing out and incidentals, about $20. Thus the approximate cost of 52 issues and 4 supplements is $5,000, which makes it necessary to secure 1000 subscribers at $5.00 each to meet the total annual expenses.

It was hoped that the weekly Current List combined with a microfilm copying service in the Library, would prove to be the ideal method of satisfying the needs of research workers no matter where they may reside. It was realized, however, that the value of such a project could only be determined by an actual trial.

Those responsible for the present experiment are deeply grateful for the many expressions of approval which have been received. It is evident, however, that the undertaking will have to be brought to the attention of many more persons capable of using it to advantage. The cooperation of the Friends of the Army Medical Library in securing additional subscribers is the most pressing need at this time.

List of Library Members

In addition to the individuals who have joined the Friends of the Army Medical Library, membership has been accepted by the libraries listed below. Of these a larger proportion have signified their desire to receive the Current List of Medical Literature than have the individuals listed last week. The explanation is probably that research workers connected with institutions having library collections depend upon the librarians to secure for them the publications they need. The librarians usually consider this one of their principle duties and are quite alert to secure everything which may be of use to those they serve.

In the larger institutions it is frequently the practice to circulate the current periodicals among the workers. This is, however, a very unsatisfactory method of acquainting large numbers of workers with the current literature. One of the purposes of the Current List is to lessen the need for circulating the original journals and promptly make known the contents of a far larger number than most libraries can afford to purchase.
